Superstitions and Beliefs

All Hallow's Eve is tonight. If you ring a bell or walk three times counterclockwise around your home before sunset you'll ward off evil spirits. You can also accomplish the same thing by burying animal bones near your front door. Walk to a crossroads at Halloween and listen to the wind who will tell you everything that will happen to you during the next year. If you see a spider today it means the spirit of a departed loved one is watching over you.

If you grew up in a household where everyone always shrieked at the sight of a black cat crossing their paths then you are likely to feel some involuntary anxiety when this happens to you today. If you are from the U.K., Japan, or Ireland a black cat is actually good luck. Superstitions are considered inconsequential remnants from backwards thinking people but the beliefs we carry even subconsciously about ourselves and the world can have devastating effects on the mind-body.
